Nursing Students Join Forces to Combat AIDS

A two-week campaign to drive out misunderstanding about AIDS will be launched by nursing students of the Chinese University on the University campus next week.

Starting from September 20, the "AIDS Forum" is organized in response to the call for more positive action on AIDS by the Committee on Education and Publicity on AIDS. It aims at providing University staff and students with a better understanding of AIDS; and educating them about methods of prevention.

In addition to an exhibition and distribution of pamphlets, the students of Nursing have proclaimed September 28 as the University's AIDS Day. On that day, two seminars by AIDS specialists will be held to give an introduction on the disease, with an emphasis on its ethical and moral issues and common misconceptions. Games stalls and video shows will be part of the AIDS Day's programmes.

The campaign will include a study by the nursing students on the impact of the "AIDS Forum" on University staff and students in terms of attitude change and knowledge acquired.
