CUHK Computer Science Graduates Gain Professional Recognition

The Exemptions Committee of the British Computer Society, after consideration of a report submitted by a visiting panel whose members paid an accreditation visit to The Chinese University of Hong Kong last November, has approved the recommendation for exemption from both Parts I and II of the Society Examination for holders of the University's BSc honours degree in Computer Science who have successfully completed their final year project with at least Grade C. Graduates with non-honours degree, however, will be given exemption from Part I Examination only. The Chinese University is the first institution outside of the UK which has ever been so accredited by the Society.

In a recent letter to inform the University of the accreditation, the Exemptions Committee gave valuable advice on the further development of the University's Computer Science Programme. The University is to inform the Committee of any changes to the staff, the curriculum and scheme of examination in the Programme. A full review of the course will be conducted in 1987.

The newly-gained accreditation enables eligible graduates who have been exempted from the Society Examination to become Associate Members of the British Computer Society (AMBCS) after at least one year's practical experience in the use and application of computers, and hence be admitted to the starting professional grade of the Society.
