The Chinese University of Hong Kong Engineering Departments Post-graduate Programmes Open Day

The three Engineering Departments of The Chinese University of Hong Kong, namely Computer Science Department, Electronic Engineering Department and Information Engineering Department, will co-organize a Post-graduate Programmes Open Day from 9:00 am to 12:15 pm on Saturday, February 9, 1991.

The aim of the open day is to familiarize the senior year students of the University and those in other tertiary institutions with the Master and Ph. D. Programmes of the Engineering Departments through a variety of activities such as seminars, exhibitions and discussions.

On that day, guided tours will be provided for the participants and departmental laboratories and computer rooms will be open for their visits. Academic staff will also be on the spots to introduce their academic programmes and answer questions. It is hoped that after attending the open day, students will have a better idea on which post-graduate programme to select.

The Engineering post-graduate programmes of the Chinese University are targeted at front edge research in computers, electronics and telecommunications. It is hoped that through involvement in research projects and courses, students would be able to help break new frontier and make contributions to the community.

In coming August, the three existing Engineering Departments and the new System Engineering Stream will be incorporated to form the Faculty of Engineering. The Faculty of Engineering of the Chinese University will mainly provide academic programmes relating to information and computer science. The University is now building a new computer network for their engineering programme, which is believed to be currently the largest workstation network in South East Asia. The project, when completed, will enable the staff and students of the faculty to have access to overseas universities in their own offices, classrooms and laboratories.

Interested parties could join this event by coming to the Lady Shaw Building (Lecture Theatre LT1) at 9:00 am on that day. There are shuttle buses running from the University train station to the Building.
