新聞稿 PRESS RELEASE

The Chinese University of Hong Kong announces the appointment of Professor Fance Fui-leung Lee as Professor of Sociology and Professor Chang Chun-shu as Visiting Professor of History with effect from January 1, 1984.

Professor Lee, 40, graduated from The Chinese University with the degree of B.S.Sc. in Sociology in 1965. He then took up doctoral studies in Medical Sociology and Methodology at the University of Pittsburgh, U.S.A. On obtaining his Ph.D. in 1968, Professor Lee returned to Hong Kong to take up a Lecturership in Sociology at his alma mater. Prior to his return to Hong Kong then, he was also on the research staff of Harvard University from 1967 to 1968. Professor Lee has been active in teaching, research and administration since his first appointment at The Chinese University. He was appointed Deputy Director of the University's Social Research Centre in 1969 and became the Centre's Director in 1973. Professor Lee was promoted to Senior Lecturership in 1978 and advanced to the rank of Reader in 1980. From 1980 to 1983, Professor Lee was Dean of the Faculty of Social Science; he has also been Director of the Institute of Social Studies since 1982. Professor Lee has a distinguished record of public service in Hong Kong. He is now Member of the Citizens' Advisory Committee on Community Relations of the Independent Commission Against Corruption (ICAC) and Convener of the same committee's Community Research Sub-committee, as well as Member of the Executive Committee of the Hong Kong Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society. Professor Lee is a prolific writer and his works appear frequently in learned journals of international reputation, including International Journal of Social Psychiatry, Southeast Asian Journal of Social Science, Asian Survey, Social Science and Medicine, and World Health Forum. Professor Lee is also the author/editor of seven books and sits on the editorial board of several international journals.

Professor Chang Chun-shu, 49, obtained his B.A. degree in History from National Taiwan University in 1956 and his Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1964. This was followed by an academic career of almost 20 years, teaching and conducting research at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, U.S.A., where he is now Richard Hudson Professor of History. Professor Chang specializes in Chinese History and Archaeology. His research interests cover political, social, cultural, economic and urban aspects of the Chinese people from 221 B.C. up to the modern times. He has chaired sessions relevant to his specialty at many international conferences and undertaken extensive archaeological fieldwork on Han-dynasty sites in Western Gansu and Xinjiang. Winner of numerous academic prizes, he also serves as reviewer or consultant on academic programmes, award of grants and appointments for many institutions in different parts of the world. Professor Chang has to his name an impressive record of scholarly publications. He has written some ten monographs and books and contributed many articles to learned journals. He is also the Editor of Michigan Papers in Chinese Studies and The Journal of Chinese History and Literature. Professor Chang is currently on leave from the University of Michigan. His visiting appointment at The Chinese University will be for a term of six months, commencing January 1, 1984.
