

新聞稿 PRESS RELEASE

The Chinese University of Hong Kong announces the appointment of two professors with effect from August 1, 1983. They are: Professor Ambrose Yeo-chi King, Professor of Sociology; and Professor Tzong-biao Lin, Professor of Economics. In addition, Professor Leonard Minkes has been appointed Visiting Professor of General Business Management for a term of two years effective September 1, 1983.

Professor King obtained his B.A. in Law at National Taiwan University in 1957 and his M.A. in Political Sciences at National Chengchi University in 1959. He later went to America and was awarded his Ph.D. by the University of Pittsburgh in 1970 before joining The Chinese University as Lecturer in Sociology in the same year. Professor King became Director of the University's Social Research Centre in 1972 and was promoted to Senior Lecturer two years later. In 1975 he went to England on a Leverhulme Fellowship and spent 9 months doing research at the University of Cambridge. Subsequently, he was with the Centre for International Studies of Massachusetts Institute of Technology as a Visiting Fellow for a short period before resuming his teaching at the University in 1976 while serving as Chairman of the Board of Studies in Sociology. Appointed the Head of New Asia College in 1977, Professor King has continued to devote his energies to teaching and research. He was promoted to Reader in 1979. Professor King is the author of numerous books and articles in Sociology and other fields. His research papers appeared in various journals, including The British Journal of Sociology, The Journal of Social and Political Affairs, Asian Survey and Modern Asian Studies. His most recent publications are Social Life and Development in Hong Kong (editor and author) (1981) and The Ideal of a University (1983). Among his professional activities, Professor King serves as editor of The China Quarterly and The Journal of Applied Behavioral Science.

Professor Lin obtained his B.A. (Economics) at National Taiwan University in 1960 and did advanced studies at Freiburg University, Germany, under a German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD) scholarship. He received his Diploma Volk-wirt in 1966 and Ph.D. with distinction in 1969. Professor Lin joined The Chinese University as Assistant Lecturer in Business Administration in 1966 and was appointed to Lecturer in Economics in 1969. In 1973 he won a Mellon Award to attend Stanford University and the University of Pittsburgh, as visiting scholar for one year. Returning to The Chinese University in 1974, Professor Lin was promoted to Senior Lecturer and took up the Associate Directorship of the University's Economic Research Centre in the same year while serving as Chairman of the Board of Studies in Economics. In 1977 he was elected Dean of the Faculty of Social Science, an office he held until 1980. Promoted to Reader in 1979, Professor Lin later became the Director of the Centre for Hong Kong Studies in 1982. Professor Lin is affiliated with a number of learned societies at home and abroad, including the American Economic Association. Apart from that, he has written widely within his specialized field of econometrics and applied economics, and his publications, which include a book on monetary systems and behaviour (in German), appear frequently in journals of international renown, the topics discussed ranging from pure econometric methods to the practical development and trade problems of the Hong Kong economy.

Professor Minkes was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained his MA degree, and is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. He has taught at University of Birmingham since 1954, became the Director of the Graduate Centre for Management Studies, and subsequently Professor of Business Organization in that university. In 1980, Professor Minkes accepted an invitation from The Chinese University to serve as Visiting Professor in the MBA Programme for a period of nine months, during which he contributed substantially to further developing the University's programme in management studies. As a specialist in his own field, Professor Minkes has served regionally and internationally in various advisory and consulting capacities. He has worked in the United Nations and is on the U.N. list of international specialists in business organization and management development. With his deep concern for the development of business education, he has travelled extensively to many parts of the world as a consultant and has taken up teaching appointments in various universities and research institutions. Professor Minkes is the author of numerous works on business studies, management education and industrial economics. These include Management Training in Sri Lanka and more recently, a series of papers on Entrepreneurship, Strategy and Organization and on Business Behaviour and Management Structure.
